

From The Desk Of Detective Kimberly Kimbell

Dear Detective ,

Great catch, detective! I am confident one or more of the seven people you named as suspects are responsible for the deaths of Astray, Button, and Long. As soon as Tate and I received the proof and the suspect list, we started digging.

With the majority of the suspects and all the victims employed at Craft Space, I decided the best place to start digging into was the company. I was not surprised to uncover the company went out of business only months after the three victims died. I'm enclosing the online article I found, as I wanted to get this vital information to you right away.

Tate is currently conducting interviews with all the suspects, and we expect to have that wrapped up within a few days. We are gathering as much evidence as we can find to send over for your review, along with the suspect interviews.

Sincerely yours,

Kimberly Kimbell

CRAFT SPACE GOING BANKRUPT!

Article written by: Pamela Pumpkin

Craft Space closing? That's the question that many business owners and employees are asking. On Thursday, Donna Day stated that she's discouraged that she will have to close the doors to Craft Space.

She said that Craft Space was her life's work and that she will miss all of her employees and wishes everyone success in their future endeavors.

This shocker came shortly after the tragic loss of three Craft Space employees back in December who contracted food poisoning after eating contaminated sushi. After such a loss, the company couldn't recover, leading to bankruptcy. Craft Space was a place where people could sell their handmade items or buy them. Craft Space sellers and employees made statements to the Gazette that they were shocked and couldn't believe that Mrs. Day gave them no warning. When we tried to reach Mrs. Day for more information, we were unsuccessful in contacting her. What a sad ending to another company that was the backbone of many small businesses.
